MEMORANIME TO: Major General Walter E. Todd, USA, Deputy Director, Joint Intelligence Group, Joint Staff

SUBJECT

: Priority List for Mational Intelligence Surveys

REFERENCE

t Priority List from the Joint Intelligence Committee, JCS, dated 6 February 1948

- i. It is requested that reference be re-examined at the sarliest practicable date with a view to developing a priority list, in terms of NIS areas, which reflects current requirements of the Joint Staff. This priority list will serve as a guide for the production of National Intelligence Surveys.
- 2. In order to provide a clear indication of the relative importance which the Joint Staff attaches to the various MIS Areas, and to insure that no MIS area is inadvertently overlooked, it is further requested that this list be compiled into three categories of priority, namely:
 - a. WIS Areas of high priority

 5. WIS Areas of mederate priority
 - c. WIS Areas of little or no priority
 (i.e., those areas which do not reflect any approciable requirements of the Joint Staff).
- 3. More precise guidance for the production of MIS will be provided if the following are added to the above-mentioned list:
 - a. MIS completion dates which are necessary to meet established Joint Staff commitments.

b. Indication of any particular chapters of certain NIS for which special priority is desired.

c. Any other requirements of the Joint Staff which should receive special attention.

- 4. While the NTS production schedule will be based upon the Joint Staff priorities, it must also take into account the production capabilities of the several intelligence agencies responsible for the preparation of the NTS. These agencies will consistently emphasize production of NTS on areas for which the Joint Staff indicates high priority. However, the regional organization existing in the several agencies will permit production of NTS on areas of lesser priority concurrently with those of high priority. Thus, the Joint Staff may actually, in many instances, receive NTS in order differing from that indicated on their priority list.
- 5. In order that the NIS production effort may be of maximum usefulness to the Joint Staff, it would be appreciated if the NIS Committee could be kept currently informed through established liaison channels regarding any changes in Joint Staff requirements which affect the priority list, or which have significant bearing on other aspects of the NIS Program.
